Summary

I'm a passionate Economics undergraduate aiming to specialize in international trade policy, digital economy, and foreign aid diplomacy.

My academic work includes quantitative research on DEPA and digital trade regulation using fixed-effects regression, and interdisciplinary analysis of foreign aid's geopolitical motivations. I've presented at student research forums and collaborated across economics, IR, and philosophy disciplines.

With hands-on experience in both diplomacy simulations and real marketing projects across Asia and Europe, I combine a global outlook with grounded research skills.
